WHAT'S WITH YOU?" Ted asked as he saw the sorrowful expression that adorned the face of his friend and classmate, Bert Bascom. "You look real gone!"

"Gone?" Bert repeated the word scornfully. "I've departed! How come parents have no consideration for their children, answer me that! How come they wanna torture their own flesh-and-blood?"

"I don't get it," Ted said. "You seem to be complaining about something."

"Complaining? I'm revolting! Or maybe she is! Here, take a look at this pin-up," Bert offered Ted a snapshot. "That's what I've got to collect at the station this morning! Look at her! Violet Crandall!" The way he said the name, anyone would think it was an awful word!

Studying the picture of the girl, Ted made no comment. For he found that he couldn't exactly agree with Bert. She wasn't any beauty, that was for sure, but she wasn't bad-looking. The main thing was the expression on her face, sort of sad and serious. Her eyes looked dark and unhappy and her face was unsmilingly grave.

"Her folks are parking her with us for a coupl'a weeks," Bert went on. "They're always shoving her on to somebody while they keep makin' trips all over the world an' writin' books! But why'd they have to pick on our house? Just because my mother went to school with her mother is no excuse! And now I've gotta go meet that goon instead o' yakkin' with the gang! Phooey!"

Again, Ted looked at the picture of the sad, unsmiling girl. He felt strangely sympathetic towards her, for what reason he couldn't have said. It just seemed so darned awful, being pushed around like that all the time. To his own astonishment, he heard himself volunteering, "Look, Bert, if you've got a date with the gang, I'll meet her! I've got nothing else to do anyhow!"

Relieved, Bert sent Ted off with his blessings. "You're a pal!" he shouted as Ted, hearing the sound of the incoming train whistle, raced towards the station.

He saw her at once as she got off the train, a lonesome little figure, sad and serious as her picture had been. Smoothing his crew cut, Ted approached her and smiled. "Hi, you're Violet Crandall. I came down to meet you!"

Her large eyes were grave as they studied him. "I'm sorry you had to go to the trouble," she said earnestly.

"Trouble? Heck, I wanted to come down and meet you! When Bert showed me your picture, I asked him if I could be sort of a welcoming committee!"

"You...wanted to meet me? Me?" Her eyes and voice were full of wonder. "Why?"

Ted stammered, but he said it straight out. "On account of you look...nice!"

There were tears in her eyes as she looked at him. Then...Violet Crandall smiled! It was...well...like the sun coming out through a gray mist, making everything light and happy! And...gosh! She was pretty, too! Awfully pretty!

Ted smiled as he took Violet's arm and led her to meet the gang. On the picture, she might have rated nothing... but in the flesh, she was a living doll! "Remember," he said, "I saw you first!"

The BRAT

AT THIS MOMENT, Veronica found it hard to believe that she had ever wanted a kid brother! "Don't be such a pest!" she half-begged, half-stormed, as her eight-year-old kid brother, Petie, trailed after her, chanting that infuriating sentence.

"Ronnie's got a date with a drip! Ronnie's got a date with a drip! Ronnie's got a..."

"Will you shut up! Mother, please make him stop saying that! Harcourt will be here any minute, and I'll sink with humiliation if Petie doesn't keep quiet! Couldn't you send him to bed or something?"

"It's not his bed-time," mother pointed out reasonably. "But, Petie, dear, Veronica's quite right! It's not nice of you to go around calling names, especially..."

"Harcourt!" Petie intoned the name scornfully. "Well, maybe he couldn't help getting such a phoney name, but why does he have to be such a drip? Keeps bragging about his family and won't let the guys use any of his baseball stuff or use his old tennis court! Boy, is that a conceited, stuffed shirt, I ask you!"

Ronnie compressed her lips into a firm line. "Harcourt Spindle happens to be descended from a family that came to this country on the Mayflower!" she said. "His family just happens to be of the social upper crust! Of course, you wouldn't understand how important that is, but I consider myself honored by a date with Harcourt Spindle, so there!"

"In that case, dear," said her mother, "I would suggest you remove the curlers from your hair. Because I believe that's Harcourt, now, turning in at the gate!"

When Ronnie, hair and eyes shining, emerged from her room to greet her date, she was enchanted by the sight that met her eyes. There was Harcourt, in an easy chair, leafing through a magazine and, miracle of miracles, Petie was with him, being utterly adorable! She watched them from the living room door.

"Hey, Harcourt, wanna see my stamp collection?" Petie was asking. Really, thought Ronnie, her kid brother could be sweet when he wanted to!

"No!" Harcourt's answer was curt.

"Wanna see my airplane models?" Petie was obviously trying to be a courteous host and Ronnie's heart almost burst with affection for him.

"No!" Now, Harcourt sounded bored, as though he wished Petie would go away. Ronnie felt a bit indignant. After all, Petie's airplane models were very important to him! There was no reason for Harcourt to be so rude!

"Show ya my new bike!" Petie offered.

"The darling!" thought Ronnie. "He's doing all this for me!"

"Look here, you brat!" Harcourt snapped nastily. "I'm not interested in any of your childish nonsense, so go away! Or shut up! Or both!"

"He is not a brat!" Suddenly, Ronnie found that she was burning with a fierce love for her kid brother and a fierce dislike for Harcourt Spindle. "What's more, you are a...a... drip!"

"That's what I told ya," Petie said contentedly to his sister as they watched Harcourt leave. "Hiya, sis!"
